Katsas Supported A Ruling That Upheld References To God On U.S. Currency And In The Pledge Of Allegiance

KATSAS SAID AN APPELLATE COURT, WHICH UPHELD REFERENCES TO GOD ON CURRENCY AND IN THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE, MADE THE RIGHT DECISION

Katsas Said An Appellate Court, Which Upheld References To God On Currency And In The Pledge Of Allegiance, Made The Right Decision. According to the Associated Press, “An appellate court has upheld references to God on U.S. currency and in the Pledge of Allegiance, rejecting arguments they violate the constitutional separation of church and state. ‘The Pledge of Allegiance serves to unite our vast nation through the proud recitation of some of the ideals upon which our Republic was founded,’ Judge Carlos Bea wrote for the majority in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals 2-1 ruling Thursday [...] Greg Katsas, who argued the currency case on behalf of the U.S. government when the appellate court heard the case in December 2007, said the panel made the right decision Thursday. ‘I think these two phrases encapsulate the philosophy on which the nation was founded,’ said Katsas, who now works in private practice. ‘There is a religious aspect to saying ‘One nation under God,’ but it isn’t like a prayer. When someone says the pledge, they’re not praying to God, they’re pledging allegiance to the country, the flag and the ideals of the country.’” Associated Press, [3/15/10]

The Supreme Court Declined To Review The Finding

The Supreme Court Declined To Review The Finding. According to the Courthouse News Service, “The Supreme Court declined to review a finding that the United States' use of the slogan ‘In God We Trust’ as an inscription on U.S. currency and as a national motto does not violate the Constitution's separation of church and state.” Courthouse News Service, [3/9/11]
